More particularly, the present invention relates to a process for recovering gold from a concentrate, in which the concentrate is refined in a high temperature, molten state. The development of less expensive ore mining techniques has led to the development of numerous processes for recovering gold, mostly from concentrates, as well as the development of new, more efficient methods for refining the concentrates to provide for an increased recovery of gold. For example, a method of gold mining and gold recovery, which involves the recovery of a gold-bearing fluid, known as bonded gold, from a source of gold-bearing ore, has been developed. This method involves the leaching or dissolving of the gold-bearing ore, and the recovery of the gold as a fluid, known as bonded gold, which is in the form of a gold/ammonium complex. The gold/ammonium complex can then be stripped from the bonded gold in a known manner. This stripping of the gold/ammonium complex can be accomplished in a stripping tower or a countercurrent extractor. The stripping of the gold/ammonium complex can also be accomplished using processes known as selective cyanidation, or cyanide leach. In these processes, the gold-bearing ore is digested with a cyanide solution, which dissolves the gold. The gold-bearing solution is then treated by known techniques such as electrowinning or chlorination to recover the gold. This recovery can be accomplished in a known manner. The stripping of gold from the gold/ammonium complex is preferably accomplished in a stripping tower or a countercurrent

Layer Masks are like Brushes. You can paint or retouch any areas on a layer while keeping the rest of the image intact. By using a Layer Mask, you can apply a mask to a character, remove wrinkles from a skin layer, or simply add shadows to a face. You can combine layer masks to create an even more amazing image. The Healing Brush is used for fixing image defects such as scratches, artifacts, or cracks. It's just like using a sponge with an eraser attached to it. You can even use this tool to paint a design or create other specialty brushes. Brush Settings control how the tool behaves, such as the opacity of the brush tip and the softness or hardness of the brush, depending on your preference. The Selection Brush controls the behavior of the brush depending on what is selected in your image. This means that depending on what you pick to paint, it will either erase or copy. What tools would you like to learn to use? Hi Guys, Today I'm going to walk you through the process of recreating a logo in illustrator that I made in photoshop. You may or may not have previously seen this logo but it was a perfect reference for photoshop! So let me explain how to do this. First of all I need to select the logo and remove the background. So I do this by selecting the logo, holding down the CTRL key and pressing X and then selecting Create Custom Shape and taking the path of the logo. Then if you want to add some colour, you could use the paint bucket tool to fill in a shape with your new colour. Next you will need to resize the shape to the desired size and when you're done you can save the symbol as a symbol. Because I wanted to get a vector symbol that would be scalable, I used Illustrator's Symbol. If you do not use this function you will lose the vector style after you save the symbol and also the symbol will be fixed to the size that you currently have the symbol at. So if you want your symbol to be scalable just save it as a symbol instead. Thank you for watching, remember to subscribe to my youtube channel to see more! Best, Donovan Hi Everyone, As I've been experimenting with making my own custom brushes, I decided to share with you my thought process and process of making a custom brush. What I've been trying to achieve is a
